To the commissioner of Patent and Trademarks:

In respond to the office letter of April 15th 2005, please:

Amend the specification as shown in the attached copy of the amended specification at:

- Page 4, line 14
- Page 5, lines 14, 18 and 19

These specification amendments add no new matters; just provide more complete description of the collections of the document generators as illustrated in FIG.1 and FIG.2, which were originally submitted with this application.

Amend claim 43 by including additional limitations that were not taught by Raggett and Bayeh. This amendment would make claim 43 to be allowable because of the unique and useful application of a telephone as a document generator in this document management process:

- Unique: at the time of this invention was conceived
  - The process of parsing and reconstructing & storing of a document that is generated by a telephone in the voice format as a complete viewable & editable document presentation in text and image formats was not published.
  - The process of parsing and reconstructing & storing of a document that is generated by a telephone in the image format as a complete viewable & editable document presentation in combination of text and image formats was not published.
- Useful: with the availability of cellular phones that can transmitted documents as voice message, text message and image message (available with camera phone), documents can be generated and transmitted from any where at any time, this allowed documents such as applications, purchasing orders and any others be conveniently submitted, parsed, reconstructed, stored and processed with the document management process of this invention. (NOTE: The applications of telephone line for transmitting Fax and data through Internet are included in the cases of Fax machine document generator and work-station document generator).

Add claims 44 and 45 as dependent claims of claim 43.

I believe that this amendment would have addressed your rejection of claim 43.

Very truly yours
